The California Ocean Protection Council and others are updating the Sea-Level Rise Guidance Document, which provides guidance to state agencies for incorporating sea-level rise projections into planning, permitting, investment and other decisions. The updated guidance will focus on the needs of state agencies and local governments. It will help cities and counties as they comply with a new law that requires them to incorporate climate change into their planning efforts.

This webinar will inform city officials on the new science behind climate models and steps that the state will be taking to address coastal issues.

Join Jenn Eckerle, Deputy Director of the Ocean Protection Council to discuss how the California Sea Level Rise Guidance will affect cities.
